Our email outreach campaign was neither designed to incite, promote, or facilitate any criminal acts by local hotels, nor did it lead to the commission of any such offences.

We never continued our communication if the hotel replied with concern and respected any declines immediately. We caused no financial loss or operational disruption during testing, as we never completed any booking requests or incurred charges.

We believe our investigation covers ongoing conduct and is of vital public interest, particularly in light of Accor's longstanding public commitments to its WATCH program, developed in partnership with ECPAT International, as a key mechanism to prevent child exploitation in hospitality.

Therefore, after exhausting open source research, a controlled compliance test was the only proportionate way to assess whether internal red flag protocols exist and operate as claimed. As such, the purpose of our email campaign was not to provoke, encourage or contribute to any criminal conduct and this outreach did not result in the commission of any such crimes.

Hotels routinely receive such booking requests; whether their due diligence measures and human rights violations prevention systems. Accordingly, our report does not allege that any criminal offenses were committed. Our report only indicates that the evidence collected through this outreach solely suggests that certain local hotels were willing to knowingly offer accommodation in ways that could materially facilitate illegal conduct.

Our outreach methodology was overseen by human rights and legal experts who regularly investigate sanction violations associated with Russia.

We consulted legal experts to confirm our investigation's alignment with international press freedoms (including Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights and the French Law on the Freedom of the Press of 29 July 1881) and the proportionality of our methods.

We chose to redact the identities of the employees we interacted with.

Comment on Applicable International Legal Frameworks

Summary

If substantiated, the conduct described could engage several bodies of international law, including international humanitarian law (IHL), international criminal law (ICL), international human rights law (IHRL), anti-trafficking and anti-sexual exploitation instruments, and business and human rights standards. While most of these frameworks bind States directly, they remain relevant to private actors because they are implemented through domestic criminal, civil, and regulatory law, and individuals acting through corporate structures may incur personal criminal liability where the relevant modes of participation are satisfied.

Allegations concerning the accommodation of children transferred from occupied areas of Ukraine and described as “orphans” pending adoption may raise issues under the law of occupation, international criminal law (including unlawful deportation or transfer), and international child protection frameworks such as the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Hague Adoption Convention. Allegations involving bookings that may be linked to the possible sexual exploitation of minors could engage anti-trafficking and child protection regimes, including the Palermo Protocol and relevant Council of Europe instruments.

For private entities, the central legal question would generally be whether they knew or should have known that their services were being used in connection with such conduct and whether they nonetheless provided material assistance or failed to take reasonable preventive steps.

Introduction

If substantiated, the conduct described could engage a dense body of international law comprising international humanitarian law (IHL), international criminal law (ICL), international human rights law (IHRL), anti-trafficking and anti-sexual exploitation instruments, and business and human rights standards.

Most of these frameworks bind States directly. However, they are still highly relevant to private actors because they are implemented through domestic criminal, civil, and regulatory law, and, besides, individuals acting through corporations may incur personal criminal liability where the facts satisfy the relevant modes of participation.

Accommodation of children transferred from occupied territories of Ukraine described as “orphans” pending adoption in Russia

If children originating from Russian-occupied areas of Ukraine were accommodated in Russia on the basis that they were “orphans,” despite reported indications that their parents remained in Ukrainian government-controlled territory, the first framework that may potentially be engaged is IHL, more specifically, the law of occupation. Under Article 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive. Article 50 further requires the occupying power to facilitate the proper identification of children and the registration of their parentage. Article 78 of Additional Protocol I permits evacuation of children from occupied territory only in narrow circumstances¹ and requires, where parents or legal guardians can be found, their written consent. If the facts show that children were removed from occupied territory, classified as “orphans,” and housed in transit toward adoption, such conduct could form part of, facilitate, or conceal conduct potentially inconsistent with these rules. Private actors are not themselves bound by IHL in the same way States and parties to the conflict are. However, if the alleged conduct occurred, the respective private actor’s services could have been used to facilitate, enable, conceal, or profit from the aforementioned conduct that IHL prohibits.

Relatedly, at the level of international criminal law, this conduct could potentially constitute or contribute to war crimes² and, depending on the broader context, crimes against humanity.³ The ICC has already treated the alleged deportation and unlawful transfer of Ukrainian children from occupied territory to the Russian Federation as conduct capable of amounting to war crimes, and in March 2023 issued arrest warrants on that basis against Vladimir Putin and Maria Lvova-Belova. Under the Rome Statute, liability extends not only to principal perpetrators but also to those who aid, abet, or otherwise assist the commission of crimes, including by providing the means for their commission. Thus, if personnel of the private entity knowingly provided accommodation or related services that materially assisted the alleged commission of such conduct, individual criminal responsibility could arise depending on the evidence of knowledge and contribution.

In the gravest case, the conduct may also require examination under Article II(e) of the Genocide Convention, which defines genocide to include the forcible transfer of children of one

² The Rome Statute; Article 8(2)(a)(vii): “unlawful deportation or transfer”; Article 8(2)(b)(viii): the transfer, directly or indirectly, by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into occupied territory, or the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory.

³ The Rome Statute; Article 7(1)(d): deportation or forcible transfer of population.

protected group to another group, where accompanied by the specific intent to destroy the group, in whole or in part, as such. The same act is reproduced in Article 6(e) of the Rome Statute. The decisive element is genocidal intent. Where children from occupied Ukrainian territory are transferred to Russia, stripped of their Ukrainian family ties or identity, and placed with Russian families, the legal framework of genocide may also be relevant and cannot be excluded as a matter of law. Here as well it bears noting that, if personnel of the private entity knowingly provided accommodation or related services that materially assisted the alleged commission of such conduct individual criminal responsibility could arise depending on the evidence of knowledge and contribution.

The same conduct would also raise serious concerns under IHRL. In particular, under the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). The CRC requires that the best interests of the child be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children; protects the child's identity, including nationality and family relations; protects against unlawful separation from parents; and requires States to combat the illicit transfer and non-return of children abroad. In the adoption context, Article 21 requires that adoption be authorized only by competent authorities based on reliable information concerning the child's status and the legally required consents, and that safeguards exist against improper financial gain. If children with living parents were falsely treated as "orphans," housed en route to adoption, or deprived of contact with their families and Ukrainian identity, the CRC framework would be engaged. The 1993 Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Co-operation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption is also highly relevant. It is designed to ensure that intercountry adoptions occur in the child's best interests and to prevent the abduction, sale of, or traffic in children. It requires the authorities of the State of origin to determine that the child is adoptable, that appropriate domestic solutions have been considered, and that required consents were freely given and not induced by payment. If the accommodation of these children formed part of an adoption pipeline operating without lawful status determination, verified consent, or proper cooperation with the competent authorities of the child's State of origin, such circumstances could fall within the scope of concerns this Convention was designed to address. A further relevant instrument is the Optional Protocol to the CRC on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (OPSC). It requires States to criminalize, among other things, improperly inducing consent, as an intermediary, for the adoption of a child in violation of applicable international legal instruments on adoption. Importantly, the OPSC contemplates liability of legal persons under domestic law. Accordingly, if a private entity or its personnel knowingly provided premises or logistical support for the alleged transit, concealment, or processing of children in circumstances inconsistent with applicable international adoption safeguards, that conduct could fall within domestic offences implementing the Optional Protocol.

Acceptance of bookings outside Russia involving children from occupied territories in circumstances strongly suggestive of sexual exploitation

If a private entity operating accommodation or related services outside Russia were alleged to have accepted bookings involving children from those same occupied territories in circumstances that may give rise to concerns about possible sexual exploitation of minors, the most directly engaged treaty frameworks would likely include the CRC, the OPSC, and international and regional anti-trafficking instruments. Under the CRC, States must protect children from all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse and prevent the abduction, sale, or trafficking of children. Under the OPSC, States must criminalize the offering, obtaining, procuring, or providing of a child for child prostitution and related forms of exploitation, and again may impose liability on legal persons under domestic law. If a private entity knowingly hosted or facilitated arrangements involving minors in exploitative circumstances, these frameworks could be engaged, subject to the facts established and the applicable domestic implementing legislation. The Palermo Protocol (Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children) is central here. It defines trafficking in persons to include the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harboring, or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation, and for children no proof of force, coercion, or deception is required. Exploitation includes, at minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others and other forms of sexual exploitation. Accordingly, where a private entity knowingly receives, harbors, or facilitates the movement of minors for exploitative purposes, such conduct could potentially fall within the factual scope of child trafficking, with any resulting liability generally arising under national laws implementing the Protocol.

In Europe, this is reinforced by the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings, which requires Parties to criminalize trafficking, address aiding and abetting, protect child victims, and provide for corporate liability where offences are committed for the benefit of a legal person or where lack of supervision made the offence possible. The Convention also contemplates measures such as the closure of establishments used to carry out trafficking offences. For private entities operating in Europe, this may provide one of the treaty-based pathways through which domestic criminal or regulatory exposure could arise where premises or services are knowingly used in connection with trafficking or the sexual exploitation of children. The Council of Europe Lanzarote Convention is also directly relevant. It is the core regional treaty on protecting children against sexual exploitation and sexual abuse, including child prostitution and related exploitation, and it places strong emphasis on prevention, reporting, victim protection, and criminalization. Where personnel of a private entity were alleged to have ignored apparent indicators of child sexual exploitation, or to have facilitated suspicious arrangements, this framework would also be relevant to the host State's duties of prevention, investigation, and punishment.

Depending on scale and context, these acts may also engage international criminal law. Under the Rome Statute, rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, and other forms of sexual violence may constitute crimes against humanity when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack on a civilian population, and trafficking-related exploitation may also intersect with the crime against humanity of enslavement. Accordingly, if the alleged exploitation of minors were shown to be linked to a broader organized pattern directed against civilians from occupied territory, these categories could become relevant as a matter of legal characterization.

Corporate responsibility, complicity, and business and human rights

The relevant question for a private entity is whether the company, or individuals acting through it, knew or should have known that their premises or services were being used in connection with potentially unlawful transfers, irregular adoption processes, trafficking, or the possible sexual exploitation of minors, and whether they nonetheless provided material assistance or failed to take reasonable preventive steps.

Under the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, all business enterprises have a responsibility to respect human rights, including through human rights due diligence to identify, prevent, mitigate, and account for adverse impacts that they cause, contribute to, or are directly linked to through business relationships. In a conflict-affected context involving children from occupied territory, these expectations are particularly acute. A private entity operating, managing, franchising, branding, or otherwise providing services in such settings would generally be expected to maintain appropriate child-safeguarding, trafficking-risk, escalation, reporting, and remediation systems. This is reinforced by current European responsible business frameworks. The EU Corporate Sustainability Due Diligence Directive requires in-scope companies to identify and address adverse human-rights impacts in their operations and chains of activities, and the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises on Responsible Business Conduct similarly require human-rights due diligence and provide a grievance mechanism through National Contact Points. These frameworks may strengthen the argument that a private entity could, depending on the facts and the applicable domestic framework, bear legal or quasi-legal responsibility where it failed to detect, prevent, or respond adequately to serious child-protection risks in high-risk contexts.

Civil liability of a private entity

If substantiated, the alleged conduct could also give rise to civil liability for the private entity and/or other relevant operators under applicable domestic law. Potential routes include negligence-based claims, claims grounded in statutory civil remedies for trafficking or child sexual exploitation, vicarious liability for acts or omissions of staff, and claims linked to failures of human rights due diligence and safeguarding. In jurisdictions such as the United States, trafficking legislation expressly provides a civil remedy not only against direct perpetrators but also against entities that knowingly benefit from participation in a venture they knew or should have known involved trafficking. In Europe, anti-trafficking compensation frameworks and emerging corporate due-diligence regimes may also be relevant.

Legal memo
Alleged unlawful conduct within the Accor group and applicable human rights law and French law

On Grizzly Research LLC's request, this legal memo examines the research into the Accor group's activity from a human rights law and French law perspective. In particular, it assesses the Accor group (Accor SA)'s responsibility in the alleged wrongdoings.

I.- Introductory remarks on Grizzly's findings and Accor SA's involvement / liability:

The findings suggest that regional subsidiaries owned by Accor SA and/or local hotels operated through management and franchise agreements by Accor SA have shown willingness to knowingly provide hotel accommodation in circumstances that materially facilitate unlawful conduct.

Under both international law and French criminal law, such practices – namely the accommodation in local hotels in Russia of unlawfully transferred Ukrainian children, as well as the hosting of so-called “sex vacations” involving underage girls and models – may constitute conduct amounting to aiding and abetting war crimes, as well as complicity in sexual offences, human trafficking, child exploitation and, more broadly, in serious human rights violations.

The findings do not establish that Accor SA has taken part directly or indirectly in these unlawful conduct. However, depending on the availability of further evidence, the possibility cannot be entirely excluded that Accor SA, in its capacity as the parent company, could incur liability under certain legal frameworks.

I.1- From a civil law perspective, Accor SA, the French parent company of the Accor group, is subject to the statutory duty of vigilance established under French law (Section II below).

As a French company employing more than 10,000 employees worldwide, Accor SA is legally required to establish and effectively implement a vigilance plan. Such a plan must include reasonable due diligence measures designed to identify and prevent serious human rights violations across the activities of the parent company, its direct or indirect subsidiaries, subcontractors, and suppliers with whom it maintains an established business relationship insofar as these activities are related to that relationship.

In other words, Accor SA's due diligence plan should be drafted and implemented in such a way that the Accor group sets out measures which reasonably detects risks, prevent the facilitation of war crimes, sexual offences, human trafficking and child exploitation, establish incident reporting mechanisms and remediate any harm caused by such unlawful conduct within the scope of its operations and value chain.

In light of the alleged criminal conduct revealed by Grizzly’s findings, Accor SA could be held civilly liable for the damage caused if the group's vigilance plan was not adequately designed and/or not effectively implemented in practice (French civil law liability - articles 1240 and 1241 of the French civil code).

I.2- On the criminal law front, the findings do not indicate that Accor SA had knowledge of the alleged criminal practices taking place in local hotels, nor that it directly or indirectly organised or carried out the conduct in question (Section III below).

Under French law, the conditions required to establish the criminal liability of a parent company for unlawful acts committed in another country, by a legally distinct entity -- such as a local subsidiary, franchisee or contractual partner operating under the laws of another jurisdiction -- are particularly stringent (article 121-2 French criminal code).

Accor SA could be held criminally responsible for the alleged unlawful conduct described in the findings only if it is demonstrated that organs acting in the name of Accor SA or representatives/executives (eg CEO Bazin) have facilitated or directly committed one of the above-listed crimes or any related offenses on the behalf of and in the interest of Accor SA.

I.3. Finally, from a consumer law standpoint, the findings suggest that Accor SA’s public communications and marketing strategy portray the group as operating according to high ethical standards and emphasise its purported leadership in combating human trafficking.

In view of the apparent discrepancy between these public representations and the alleged unlawful practices occurring on the ground, there is a risk that Accor SA could be considered to have disseminated misleading information to consumers regarding the scope and effectiveness of its human rights commitments.

Such conduct could potentially give rise to liability under French consumer law for “misleading commercial practices” (articles L. 121-2 to L.121-5 of the French consumption code) (Section IV below).

II.- Potential violations by Accor SA of its duty of vigilance obligations

II.1.- Accor SA's duty of vigilance obligations

Accor SA is expected to align its operations with internationally recognised principles of responsible business conduct.

The United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, a soft law instrument, provide a framework based on three pillars -- protect, respect, and remedy -- that guide companies in embedding human rights considerations into their business practices.

Principle 23 clarifies that companies should respect international human rights standards wherever they operate, including seeking ways to do so when faced with conflicting requirements. As such, companies should not take advantage of operating contexts that provide weaker local protection for human rights by lowering their own standards, but should instead continue to use international standards as the relevant benchmark.

Accor SA is also subjected to French domestic due diligence law.

The French duty of vigilance obligation is legally binding for Accor SA. In particular, article L. 225-102-5 of the French commercial code provides that when damage, such as human rights violations, results from a failure to comply with a company's obligations to create and implement due diligence measures (as listed in Article L. 225-102-4 of the French commercial code), this company is held liable and has to compensate for the damage that the execution of these obligations would have made it possible to avoid.

According to article L. 225-102-4 of the French commercial code, Accor SA has the obligation to establish and effectively implement vigilance plan which include reasonable due diligence measures designed to identify risks and prevent serious violations of human rights as well as harm to the health and safety of individuals, resulting from the activities of the company and of the companies it controls, directly or indirectly, as well as from the activities of subcontractors or suppliers with whom the company maintains an established commercial relationship, where such activities are linked to that relationship.

Accordingly, Accor SA's vigilance plan applies not only to entities incorporated in France but also to local entities established in other jurisdictions, as well as to commercial partners with whom Accor maintains established business relationship. In other words, Accor SA's plan is supposed to cover the activities of entities whose allegedly unlawful practices are described in the present report.

Under French law, the vigilance plan must include several core components:

- (i) a risk mapping designed to identify, analyse and prioritise risks;

- (ii) procedures for the regular assessment of the situation of subsidiaries, subcontractors and suppliers with whom an established commercial relationship exists, in light of the identified risks;
- (iii) appropriate measures intended to mitigate risks or prevent serious harm;
- (iv) a whistleblowing and reporting mechanism relating to the existence or occurrence of risks, established in consultation with the company's representative trade unions;
- (v) a monitoring mechanism designed to track the implementation of these measures and assess their effectiveness.

In sum, duty of vigilance obligations require Accor SA to conduct a comprehensive assessment of its entire value chain. Importantly, French courts have previously emphasised that such assessments must be proportionate to the potential severity of violations relating to human rights, fundamental freedoms, health and safety of persons.

II.2.- The content of Accor SA's vigilance plan

Accor SA has published a vigilance plan annually since 2017. The most recent version was published in 2025, page 265 onwards: https://assets.group.Accor.com/yrj0orc8tx24/2lhgzltPjH1smSYZwTqPYZ/2b40fef09ad97bf58cfe96c306f2d181/Accor_DEU2024_FR_20250328_MEL.pdf (https://assets.group.Accor.com/yrj0orc8tx24/2lhgzltPjH1smSYZwTqPYZ/2b40fef09ad97bf58cfe96c306f2d181/Accor_DEU2024_FR_20250328_MEL.pdf)

Given Grizzly's findings, it may be questioned whether Accor SA's risk assessment processes, mitigation measures, regular assessment procedures, and remediation measures were robust enough to detect risks of human rights violations, prevent the alleged practices highlighted in the report, identify when unlawful conduct actually takes place and respond to any harm when committed.

By way of illustration, the vigilance plan itself acknowledges the existence of significant risks in certain regions in which the Group operates. It states, for example:

“Among the identified risks, those related to forced labor, indecent working conditions, and human trafficking have been identified as salient in countries where the Group operates, in the Middle East, Asia-Pacific, and Latin America.” (p. 266) (unofficial translation, throughout this document)

As part of its preventive measures aimed at combating child exploitation, Accor SA highlights its WATCH programme, which is described as follows:

“The program relies on a set of tools and training made available to hotel managers and employees. Guests are also made aware of how to detect and report at-risk situations. (...) A new training module, available in six languages, was developed and made available to the Group's headquarters and hotels. Accor updated existing communication tools and developed new ones, such as videos from various stakeholders aimed at raising awareness among its on-site employees about the risks of child sexual exploitation in the hotel industry. Accor strengthened its prevention efforts by participating in the international awareness campaign led by the NGO It's a Penalty to combat human trafficking and exploitation, both in France and around the world. (...) In 2024, Accor participated in several industry initiatives with various stakeholders in the tourism sector to exchange information on prevention and remediation of negative human rights impacts, including sexual violence and the sexual exploitation of children. Discussions and awareness-raising activities took place within the roundtable on child protection in the tourism sector, in collaboration with private sector companies, NGOs, and representatives of the United Nations.” (p. 270)

The vigilance plan also sets out mechanisms intended to respond to and remediate identified risks of sexual violence and child exploitation. In particular, Accor SA indicates that:

“The Group’s Security Department has developed and deployed an incident reporting tool enabling precise monitoring by region and brand across the Group, with the aim of strengthening security in hotels, improving team response to incidents, harmonizing crisis management protocols, and raising employee awareness. This tool covers all Group activities, all guests, employees, and local communities interacting with the hotels and sites. Ultimately, Accor hopes not only to reduce the severity of incidents but also to strengthen its commitment to safety and social responsibility through transparent and effective crisis management. As part of the Group’s actions to combat sexual violence and child exploitation, the incident reporting tool allows hotels to report these acts under the following categories:

– child abuse (subcategory: suspected child sexual abuse)

– prostitution (subcategories: suspected prostitution and suspected child prostitution)

– assault (subcategory: sexual assault).

Among other things, this tool is implemented...” via a digital interface in the form of a three-part form (hotel identification, incident description, document submission). The development of the incident reporting tool began in 2024. The tool is already deployed in Premium, Midrange, and Economy (PM&E) – Luxury & Lifestyle (L&L) hotels in the Americas region (excluding the United States and Canada). Complete deployment across all regions is planned for 2025. This tool is intended to be deployed in all hotels within the Group, regardless of their management structure or brand. In 2025, a working group will strengthen the monitoring of gender-based violence cases beyond the category already available.” (p. 229)

Finally, with respect to monitoring and control of local hotel operations, Accor SA states that it conducts internal audits at local headquarters in order to “ensure compliance with the principles and procedures set out in the Group’s Ethics and CSR Charter, aimed in particular at preventing acts of corruption as well as those falling within the scope of the vigilance plan.” (p. 276)

As part of its oversight of local hotel operations, Accor SA further indicates that “subsidiary and management-contracted hotels complete an annual self-assessment questionnaire, which notably considers their adherence to and awareness of the commitments outlined in the Ethics and CSR Charter.” (p. 276)

According to the Group’s own reporting, in 2024, 86% of country headquarters reported that employees at their headquarters and subsidiary hotels were aware of and regularly informed about the Group’s Ethics and CSR Charter; and 93% of directors of subsidiary and management-contracted hotels reported that they regularly raised employee awareness of the commitments contained in the Charter (p. 276).

II.3.- Concerns regarding the adequate design and the effective implementation of Accor SA’s vigilance plan

In light of the findings outlined in Grizzly’s report, several observations can be made regarding the effectiveness of Accor SA’s duty of vigilance framework.

Firstly, the vigilance plan appears, at least formally, to contain the core components required under French law. It includes risk mapping, preventive and mitigation measures, whistleblowing mechanisms, incident reporting tools, and monitoring procedures. The plan also expressly acknowledges the existence of risks related to human trafficking and exploitation in certain regions where the Group operates and sets out training and awareness initiatives aimed at preventing such abuses.

Secondly, the vigilance framework is designed to apply broadly across the Group’s organisational structure and commercial ecosystem. In principle, it extends not only to the parent company and its subsidiaries but also to hotels operated under management agreements and other contractual arrangements. As a matter of formal design and outreach, the plan therefore seeks to address issues arising throughout the group’s operational value chain.

However, thirdly, the alleged facts described in the findings raise significant questions as to the plan’s practical effectiveness.

In terms of risk identification and prevention measures, if local hotels were indeed willing to provide accommodation that materially facilitated activities such as child exploitation, sexual offences or human trafficking, this would suggest that the vigilance measures described in the vigilance plan may not have been adequate or sufficient in practice.

This concern is further reinforced by the functioning of the plan's reporting mechanisms. Although Accor SA claims to have established incident reporting systems intended to allow employees and stakeholders to report suspected misconduct or human rights violations, the findings indicate that certain local hotel operators expressly stated that they would refrain from informing the Accor's French headquarters of unlawful or questionable practices. If substantiated, this may reveal weaknesses in the enforcement, oversight or operationalisation of the Group's reporting measures contained in its vigilance framework, particularly in high-risk environments.

The apparent discrepancy between the Accor SA's vigilance plan on paper and the conduct allegedly occurring at certain local establishments may therefore expose Accor SA to scrutiny regarding the effective implementation of its duty of vigilance obligations under French law.

In sum, Under the French duty of vigilance framework, the parent company must not only establish such mechanisms but also ensure that they are capable of functioning effectively in practice. In this respect, the central legal issue is not merely whether Accor SA has formally adopted a vigilance plan, but whether the measures contained in that plan were adequately designed, sufficiently precise and operational as well as effectively implemented, within the group's sphere of influence, in order to reasonably assess risks of human rights violations, prevent these violations and identify when violation occur and remediate violations.

II.4.- Short Remarks on Holding a French Parent Company Liable Despite Foreign Law Arguments

Under Article 1837 of the French Civil Code and Article L.210-3 of the French Commercial Code, any company whose registered office is located in France is subject to French law.

In particular, the law applicable to the place where the damage occurred does not override the legal framework governing the conduct and compliance obligations of the French parent company.

The fact that the alleged harm occurred outside French territory does not necessarily preclude the possibility of engaging the liability of a French parent company, such as Accor SA, under French law. Nor does it allow Accor SA to avoid scrutiny by relying solely on the legal framework applicable to its local subsidiaries or partners (for example, a less stringent local legal framework which does not oblige companies to set up vigilance plans).

Furthermore, the statutory duty of vigilance is generally understood as a matter of public policy within the French legal order. The recent European Union directive on corporate sustainability due diligence establishes that the relevant due diligence obligations apply with overriding effect, operating as mandatory rules of application (lois de police). As such, these provisions are intended to apply even where the law of a third country would otherwise govern aspects of the underlying conduct. In addition, French courts have also recently recognised the overriding mandatory nature of the duty of vigilance.

In sum, from a private international law perspective, these principles strengthen the legal basis upon which a French parent company may be held accountable for failures in the design or implementation of its due diligence and vigilance framework, even where the alleged harm materialises outside France or involves entities incorporated under foreign law.

III. Criminal liability of Accor SA's leaders and Accor SA itself

The findings suggest that certain local entities operating under the Accor brand – independent legal persons distinct from Accor SA in France – have shown willingness to engage in practices that, if substantiated, could be characterised as facilitating serious violations of human rights and criminal law, including potential war crimes (such as the accommodation of unlawfully transferred children) and sexual offences, including situations involving minors, as well as conduct potentially linked to human trafficking (sex vacations with underaged girls).

Under the general principle of individual criminal liability, Accor SA cannot be held responsible for offenses committed by its subsidiary, as each entity possesses its own distinct legal personality.

Liability of Accor SA, the parent company, would therefore require independent grounds demonstrating that it directly participated in, facilitated or otherwise indirectly enabled the unlawful conduct.

At this stage, the findings do not indicate that Accor SA was aware of these practices, nor that Accor SA, as the parent company, directly or indirectly participated in or endorsed such conduct.

III.1. Means of holding a company criminally liable under French law: prior establishment of Accor SA's organs and/or leaders' criminal responsibility

Under French criminal law, the criminal liability of a legal entity is contingent upon the prior establishment of an offence committed on its behalf by its organs or representatives. In practice, this requires demonstrating that the company's executive leadership - the natural and legal persons acting as its organ or representative (eg. Bazin) - personally committed the underlying offence while acting in the name or for the benefit of the company.

Accordingly, the criminal responsibility of the company is derivative in nature: it presupposes that the conduct constituting the offence can be attributed to the acts of its directors, senior executives, or other authorised representatives. Absent proof that such persons have engaged in unlawful conduct in the course of their functions and on behalf of the company, the conditions required to establish the criminal liability of the legal entity under French law are not satisfied.

Outside of offenses committed in their private life, the liability of the company's executive leaders is engaged when:

- the executive personally commits an offense in the course of professional activity;
- one of their subordinates commits an offense in the exercise of their duties within the company.

However, under certain conditions, the wrongful acts of a subordinate may be indirectly attributed to the executive.

It is important to establish that the offense was indeed committed by a subordinate -- in other words, by persons placed under the direction of the executive, such as the employees of the company -- and that they were acting in the exercise of their functions within the company/legal entity.

In this respect, it is not so much the executive's liability for the acts of others that is at issue, but rather personal liability. In their capacity as executive, holder of management powers and the necessary means to exercise them, it is incumbent upon them to ensure compliance within the company with applicable legal and regulatory provisions. It is through this obligation that the personal attribution of breaches committed within the structure managed by the executive becomes possible.

Indeed, according to the often-cited principle:

“While, in principle, no one is liable to penalties except for their own acts, criminal liability may nevertheless arise from the acts of others in exceptional cases where certain legal obligations impose a duty to take direct action regarding the acts of an agent or subordinate; notably, in industries subject to regulations enacted in the interest of public health or safety, criminal liability essentially extends to the company's executives, to whom the conditions and manner of operation of the enterprise are personally imposed.” (Crim., Feb. 28, 1956, Bull. crim., No. 205).

The main offenses targeted are violations of labor law, tax and economic regulations, environmental law, and, more generally, all offenses constituting noncompliance with regulations applicable to the company.

However, there are two grounds for exoneration of the executive.

First, the executive's criminal liability will not be engaged if powers have been effectively delegated to another person within the structure. Second, the executive may escape criminal prosecution if it is proven that the offense resulted from the exclusive fault of the victim or subordinate and not from a personal fault of the executive.. However, this scenario is rare, as in most cases it is possible to identify negligence or imprudence attributable to the executive.

III.2.- Accor SA's criminal responsibility

With regard to the company's criminal liability itself, article 121-2 of the French Criminal Code provides that:

“Legal persons, with the exception of the State, are criminally liable, according to the distinctions of Articles 121-4 to 121-7, for offenses committed, on their behalf, by their organs or representatives.”

Within this framework, in order to attribute an offense to a legal person (private law entity, and under certain conditions, a public law entity), it must first be established that:

- a natural person (an “organ” or “representative”) as described in section III.1.2. ;
- committed an offense ;
- for the benefit of the legal person (“on its behalf”).

This illustrates the articulation between, on the one hand, the prerequisite of a punishable act attributable to the organ or representative, and on the other hand, the criminal liability of the legal person.

Applied to the present findings, it does not seem that there is evidence showing that an Accor SA executive/representative has engaged directly or indirectly in the unlawful conduct. It is also questionable whether liability could be based on negligence or a failure to exercise adequate oversight where foreseeable risks were not prevented due to issues of extraterritoriality, combined with the group's structure composed of multiple legal entities with independent legal personalities and separately governed management, which makes it difficult to trace liability back to a French representative/executive and thus to Accor SA.

IV. Misleading commercial practices: Discrepancy between Accor SA's claims of ethical conduct and alleged illegal practices on the ground

Under Article L.121-2 of the French Consumer Code, a commercial practice is considered misleading when it is based on false claims, statements or representations, or on information that is likely to mislead consumers, particularly regarding the essential characteristics of a good or service.

This offence is punishable by two years' imprisonment and a fine of €300,000. The amount of the fine may be increased, in proportion to the benefits derived from the offence, to 10% of the average annual turnover, calculated on the basis of the three most recent annual turnovers known at the time of the offence, or 50% of the expenses incurred in carrying out the advertising campaign or commercial practice that gave rise to the offence.

Recently, greenwashing practices have increasingly been analysed through the lens of misleading commercial practices. French courts and regulators have already applied consumer protection rules in this context, including in high-profile cases involving misleading environmental claims (Total Energie: <https://www.amisdelaterre.org/communiqué-presse/total-condemned-for-greenwashing-a-major-legal-precedent-against-climate-misinformation-by-oil-majors/>).

This evolution illustrates how existing consumer law provisions may be mobilised to address forms of misleading corporate messaging that go beyond traditional product-related claims.

By analogy and in a legally innovative way, misleading commercial practices may also arise in the context of corporate communications relating to human rights or ethical commitments, such as in Accor SA's case. These claims relating to corporate social responsibility may fall within the scope of misleading commercial practices only insofar as they are liable to mislead consumers regarding the ethical or human rights commitments of the company.

Applied to the present case, Accor SA's misleading representations relating to social and human rights practices – as described in Grizzly's findings – may distort consumers' perception of a company's ethical conduct. In light of the evolving application of consumer protection law, there are therefore grounds to argue that misleading human rights claims could similarly fall within the scope of misleading commercial practices under French consumer law.

On the one hand, the group has publicly highlighted its commitment to preventing human rights violations through its vigilance plan, training programmes, incident reporting tools, and ethical policies, including initiatives such as the WATCH programme aimed at raising awareness of child exploitation. These communications, which are accessible via the Group's website, sustainability reporting, and other public materials, are capable of shaping the perception of consumers, guests, business partners, and other stakeholders regarding the Group's human rights and ethical commitments.

On the other, Grizzly's findings indicate that certain local hotels, including those operated under management or franchise agreements, may have been involved in practices that raise serious human rights concerns.

In such a scenario, there may be a risk that external stakeholders like consumers perceive the Group's public communications as presenting a more comprehensive picture of its human rights performance than is reflected in practice.

If these reports are substantiated, there could be a discrepancy between the Group's stated commitments and the practices observed at the local level. Accor SA could therefore be held accountable for misleading commercial practices.

However, this analysis is provided on a cautious and preliminary basis: the application of French consumer law in this context is an innovative and currently underused avenue that would depend on further verification and evidence concerning the Group's communications and local practices. Any potential finding of misleading commercial practices would require a detailed demonstration that the representations were likely to influence stakeholders' perceptions and that the preventive measures were not reasonably implemented in practice.

Как я уже сказал, все детки кроме одной — сироты из новых регионов. У одной девочки есть родители на подконтрольной украинскому режиму территории. Они конечно против удочерения и настроены против России, но ребенок оформлен в органах опеки ДНР и с точки зрения закона нет никаких нарушений. Со всеми будут опекуны из республик в лице представителей Глав Республик.

Завтра возьмем. Буду благодарен, если уточните по месту. Наше беспокойство было вызвано тем, что ibis принадлежит французам и они, как недружественное государство, могут напакостить как-то когда узнают о удочерении девочек из Донбасса. Вы же сами новости видели, что они про нашего Президента говорили из-за этого...

Добрый день, Евгений!

Благодарю Вас за интерес, проявленный к нашему отелю, и за ожидание!

С радостью разместим гостей в отеле в номерах Стандарт.

Стоимость номера по спец.тарифу составит 4400 руб./сутки без завтрака.

Завтрак Шведский стол = 950 руб./чел.

Прошу заметить, что заселение в гостиницу осуществляется только согласно паспорту РФ и согласия от родителей/опекунов на заселение несовершеннолетних.

Честно говоря, наш отель ни разу не заселял детей-сирот, т.к. наша основная аудитория – бизнес поездки.

Я могу попробовать уточнить в адресном бюро Чувашской Республики, какие документы необходимы для регистрации девочек, но мне нужна полная информация о списке гостей.

Поэтому в целях соблюдения конфиденциальности Вы можете попробовать самостоятельно уточнить перечень документов, необходимый для регистрации в гостинице, в том регионе, где Вы сейчас находитесь.

Буду рада ответить на возникшие вопросы.

Хотел бы уточнить о возможности размещения четырех детей из ДНР и ЛНР в вашем отеле 22-27 марта 2026 г. для размещения их в семьи. Милые девочки возрастом 14-17 лет. Красотки! Трое - сироты, у еще одного ребенка где-то родители на Украине. У всех удочерение на финальном этапе, их уже ожидают семьи. С каждым ребенком будет сопровождающий в номере. Подскажите, пожалуйста, доступные варианты и цены.

Добрый вечер!

Хотел бы уточнить о возможности размещения четырех детей из ДНР в вашем отеле 22-27 марта 2026 г. для размещения их в семьи. Милые девочки возрастом 14-16 лет. Трое - сироты, у еще одного ребенка где-то родители на Украине. У всех удочерение на финальном этапе, их уже ожидают семьи. С каждым ребенком будет сопровождающий в номере. Подскажите, пожалуйста, доступные варианты и цены.

Учитывая чувствительность темы, прошу Вас соблюдать конфиденциальность передаваемой информации.

Хотел бы уточнить о возможности размещения четырех детей из ДНР и ЛНР в вашем отеле 22-27 марта 2026 г. для размещения их в семьи. Милые девочки возрастом 14-17 лет. Красотки! Трое - сироты, у еще одного ребенка где-то родители на Украине. У всех удочерение на финальном этапе, их уже ожидают семьи. С каждым ребенком будет сопровождающий в номере. Подскажите, пожалуйста, доступные варианты и цены.

Учитывая чувствительность темы, прошу Вас соблюдать конфиденциальность передаваемой информации.

Спасибо! Вскоре отправлю Вам необходимые документы. По эмейлу будет нормально?

Отправляю расчет на утверждение. Так же еще сегодня появился вопрос из администрации — обязан уточнить. Поскольку Mercure — это отель французский, недружественной нам страны, где спасение и усыновление детей Донбасса называют кражей и за это хотят арестовать нашего Президента — мы можем быть уверены в конфиденциальности? От несогласованной прессы, если такая будет, и от вашего западного офиса? Я полагаю вы не передадите им нашу беседу и факт размещения девочек.

Hello,

I would like to inquire about possibility of hosting four young beautiful girls from Donetsk People's Republic, Russia (14-17 years old). They will be in transit to a modelling contest and since they are orphans because of the war in Ukraine they are being transferred with the model agency employees. Can we ask for four rooms, 2 persons in each? Do you have a spa and a swimming pool? What kind of bed do you have?

Dates: 28 March - 5 May 2026.

Best regards,

Evgenii

Hello,

I would like to inquire about possibility of hosting four young beautiful girls from Donetsk People's Republic, Russia (14-17 years old). They will be in transit to a modelling contest and since they are orphans because of the war in Ukraine they are being transferred with the model agency employees. Can we ask for four rooms, 2 persons in each? Do you have a spa and a swimming pool? What kind of bed do you have?

Dates: 28 May - 5 July 2026.

Best regards,

Vladimir

I'd like the room to have wine, French champagne, flowers (tulips and roses). Additionally, would it be possible to prepare gift baskets for the girls so when they arrive they'll be happy?

Also please add condoms and lubricants to each room.

Asunto: Stay for young beautiful girls

Hello,

I would like to inquire about possibility of hosting four young beautiful girls from Donetsk People's Republic, Russia (14-17 years old). They will be in transit to a modelling contest and since they are orphans because of the war in Ukraine they are being transferred with the model agency employees. Can we ask for four rooms, 2 persons in each? Do you have a spa and a swimming pool? What kind of bed do you have?

Dates: 28 May - 5 July 2026.

Best regards,
Vladimir
